ORIGIN OF THE DOLL.

And Incidentally Why It Is Called a Poupee in French.

A diligent search through ancient the reign of King Charles VI. of France. The story goes that an Italian named Pusello Grivaldi gave an exhibition at Paris of 60 wax figures. among which were facsimiles of several Roman empresses. To this theater of marionettes all Paris thronged. and the fame of the show became so great that Queen Isabella and the other members of the court resolved to entertain the king with it. The monplease him.

Accordingly Grivaldi brought his wax figures to court, and, aided by a trained monkey, gave a very funny entertainment. The king was especially pleased with a wax figure which was supposed to represent Poppaea, the beautiful wife of Nero, for whose sake he put his first wife to death, and who also in her turn came to an untimely end at his hands. King Charles was much moved when he heard her touching story, and he insisted on keeping the beautiful wax Poppaea.

Sig. Grivaldi availed himself of the opportunity to make a little money easily, and finally consented to part with his treasure for 400 gold pieces. The king was delighted, and hardly a week passed that he did not buy another wax figure from the ingenious Italian. Wishing to please him, the entire court followed his cample, so that for awhile wax figur - were exceedingly popular in Paris.

paeas and other wax figures were turned over to the children, and with them they have ever since continued to be popular. A striking proof of the truth of this story is the fact that the German word for delbis "puppe," and the French word is "poupee," both of which are clearly forms of the word "Poppaea."-N. Y. Herald.

SOLDIERS' MEDALS.

Kitchener Made Himself Popular by Presenting Them Promptly.

Among the characteristics that have made Lord Kitchener popular with British soldiers, says the London News, is his jealous watchfulness for their interests in small things as well as big. It was shown throughout the recent campaign, and it did not cease with active service. Medals are small things, perhaps, in the estimation of some civilians, but they are important to "Tommy," who naturally likes to wear the decorations and proclaim his part in stirring scenes while public interest is warm on the subject. Knowing this, Lord Kitchener took care that there should be no delay in issuing the Khedive's medal to regiments of the British brigade. Omdurman was fought on September 2, and within five weeks from that date the sirdar was presenting medals, with clasps for "Khartoum," to British grenadiers at Wellington barracks. Now every soldier who took part in that campaign has received the Egyptian decoration to which he is entitled, but nothing heard yet about an English medal.

A great contrast to Lord Kitchener's promptitude in distributing med als while soldiers have an opportunity of displaying them to appreciative yes is presented by the action of our war department authorities, who almost invariably delay the issue of decorations to noncommissioned officers and men until a year or two after interest in a campaign has waned. Old soldiers will tell you they had to wait at least two years for their medals after the campaigns in South Africa, Egypt, the Eastern Soudan and Burmah. In the interval many had left the ranks, and passed to the reserve, so that they never had a chance of wearing their medals in uniform. Sometimes the period of waiting has been much longer. terest in a campaign has waned. Old been much longer. The Seventh Hussars have just received their medals for the last Matabele engineen, which ended more than two years ago, but none have been issued yet to the local forces, who certainly took their full share of all the dangers and hardships. No excuse can be given for this dilatoriness, in which there is a touch of injustice except the senseless routine which should be abolished at once.
